GREEN DRESSING

Music and television have bowed their heads to the green movement, so it was only a matter of time before the fashion world capitulated.

While Channel Ten has instructed its Logies participants they must walk (gasp!) the several hundred metres from their hotel to the red carpet at Crown Casino this Sunday, designers know how difficult it is to get the fashion pack to walk anywhere, what with all those sky-high shoes.

This week the caftan designer Camilla Franks

will ferry buyers and important media to a private showroom in Woolloomooloo using hybrid cars or, as the designer calls them, "green limousines",

a service also employed by the high-flying Sydneysiders Cate Blanchett and Richard Wilkins.

The designer - who will show her spring/summer collection as part of Australian Fashion Week tomorrow - will also fill a new range of biodegradable Fairtrade bags with goodies for special guests.
